

OXFORD EMI
TRAINING

EMI Introductory Course for University Lecturers
Tokyo, Japan
26-28 August 2019

Welcome to Oxford EMI Training

When a university goes international, its faculty members and staff are faced with the challenge of teaching their academic subject through the medium of English.

Oxford EMI Training supports university lecturers who teach, or are going to teach, in English. We give courses in Oxford and also in universities in many countries around the world and we draw upon the expertise in teaching and learning within the University of Oxford. In your course in Tokyo we will investigate both the linguistic and pedagogical challenges of teaching and learning in EMI in a university context.

Our courses are based on research into EMI conducted by our team and other academics in Oxford and abroad.

We are looking forward to welcoming you to Otsuma Women's University for this introductory EMI course and continuing our relationship with your university.

Julie Dearden
Director
Oxford EMI Training
Julie.dearden@oxfordemi.co.uk

Your course

We are looking forward to welcoming you to your 3-day Oxford EMI Introductory Course for University Lecturers.

This course is taught by our team of Oxford EMI trainers.

During this professional development course you will explore the research behind English Medium Instruction, investigate practical teaching and lecturing skills and improve your own English language skills necessary for high quality teaching and lecturing.

This course is suitable for academics with varying teaching experience and teaching different subjects. You may already teach through EMI and want to perfect your skills or you may be about to start teaching in English and need reassurance and practical support.

You should have an intermediate level in English to participate as you need to be able to understand us. The course is in English and you will be expected to participate in English but your English can be 'global' English and does not need to be 'native-speaker' English! We hope that you will gain confidence in both your English and your pedagogical skills during your course in Otsuma.

EMI Introductory Course Programme, Tokyo, 26-28th August 2019

	Monday 26 th	Tuesday 27 th	Wednesday 28 th
Morning 9.00-10:30	Contextualising EMI Introduction to EMI programme EMI in a global context: Internationalising our Universities Teaching through EMI-your experience	Achieving Comprehension How to measure language proficiency Language issues for teachers and students Research on teaching: IRF, Wait Time and questions	Interactive teaching & Active learning 1 How to interact with classes using technology Thinking skills and applying Bloom's Taxonomy to the classroom
10.45-12.30	Questions about EMI Reasons behind introducing EMI Analysis of teaching skills involved	Observing Observation – your experience to date Observing the beginning of an EMI class	Integration Integrating students into the country and the classroom
Afternoon 14:00- 17:00	Language Awareness Analysis of an EMI class from a language perspective Technical terms and definitions – a look at the issues and possible solutions Delivering your lecture- how to make your English easier to understand	Observing Observing an EMI class and applying criteria Preparing an observation checklist	Interactive teaching & Active learning 2 Brief interactive tasks for the classroom Teaching tasks and practice in giving and receiving effective feedback End of course reflection		